

158
2021

The upsides of downward deference

B. Sebastian Reiche
Tsedal B. Neeley

This article is part of IESE Insight Review, issue 158, 2021.

Copyright © IESE Business School, 2021. All rights reserved.

This article is for personal, noncommercial use. No part of this article may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without prior written permission from iesep@iese.com.

The posting of this article on open-access internet sites is prohibited. To obtain permission to post this article on secured and/or password-protected intranet sites, or to purchase copies of this article for use in academic settings, please write to iesep@iese.com.

The upsides of downward deference

By B. Sebastian Reiche
and Tsedal B. Neeley

Leaders who find themselves out of their element can get ahead by deferring to subordinates. Here we explain how power can come from letting it go.

Do Not Copy or Post

